

ABSTRACT

This study aims to find out whether taking pictures at hospital services can be taken without prior permission. This study used normative research methods by studying legislation, theories, and concepts related to the problems that exist in this study. A person can take pictures for personal gain, or for the purpose of evidence to report to the authorities about wrong actions carried out by hospital services. Hospitals cannot stop treatment in patients because patients or families take pictures of hospital services. If the hospital is proven to stop the service it can be considered neglecting the patient and can be subject to sanctions in the form of a civil suit, criminal suit, and administrative suit. The study adds knowledge, idea, as a reference for making a picture-taking regulation, and to add insight so that people can understand about taking pictures of hospital services.
